

Tyisha Hill

All My Life

I choose to focus on the discrimination and racism of black women for this project because I myself have experienced such uncomfortable situations. For me growing up I never realized that not everyone goes through the same experiences, for example my hair. People would constantly grow up asking about my hair or touch it without asking and being so young at the time it was such a normal thing it wasn't until 6th grade where I realized the only people this happened to were black women of color. Nowadays people are more aware of the stigmas around black women's hair and all of that but there are still other situations to shed light on.

Growing up I saw first hand the unfair medical treatment my cousin received even though she was just 12 years old. This is something never really discussed and I wanted to bring awareness to it. I think being able to express the things I have experienced just makes me feel a little better with the trauma it caused.

My social justice issue pertains to the discrimination and racism that specifically targets black women of color. While of course racism affects all people of color many of the experiences for women of color goes overlooked. The idea of it being a man's world still comes into play no matter the issue and unfortunately this leads to the ignorance of the experience many black women endure in their everyday lives.

I choose this interaction to be more experience based rather than game based because this isn't a game for me. I can't start over or choose a different character so making this something where it really just focuses on the interaction I feel lets the users have a better understanding of the "game". I kept the design aspect to everything really simple with not much detail because again the point of the whole "game" is to be more aware of all that is happening.